

4. LANDRIS PATH

VALLEY PATHS

Natural Park of the Friulian Dolomites

From the road of Pala Barzana, the trail descends to the Colvera Jouv in an area named Buffui; during the descent, you cross other old tracks that led to houses and stavoli now abandoned. The path at some points is bordered by dry stone walls, clear evidence of the ancient care for these paths that in the past were the only connections within the valley.

After about 250 meters you cross a small stream, after a few steps you reach Colvera di Jouv. This stream collects all waters flowing down from the northern slopes of mount Jouv (after intense rainfall the crossing can be difficult). Beyond the river, the path turns to the left and gently climbs the lower part of the slope until a forest track near a ruin. Take the trail towards west and follow it up to a clearing. From this point a looped path leads to Landri Viert. Go down to the riverbed of a small stream and climb up for a hundred meters: you will be in a narrow valley; on the right bank, the karstic dissolution created a large vault with curved edge and its name derives from the presence of a wide cavity. In the local dialect the word landri means cave, while viert means open, large. Continuing the ascent along the stream you reach the base of a small ravine, here the trail climbs up and after some hairpin turns it arrives at the top level of the engraving. From this point the path descends to the clearing place at the end of the forest track. Now you have to retrace the section already travelled on the way up, until the ruin; some steps ahead, on the right, is the road leading to Landri Scur. At the base of the rock wall towards north you can notice some cavities, while if you look to the west you will see a natural arch in rock. Returning to the ruin you can go back to the start using the path already walked on the way there. Alternatively, you can walk down the forest trail until the gorge of Colvera (3 km) to observe the impressive phenomena of river erosion. In this case it is good to leave a mean at the end point.
